How to use this

Describe what must remain consistent before adding atmosphere. A prompt becomes easier to control when identity, composition, and styling are separated.

Best used when: you need a profile image, character sheet, cover, banner, or repeatable visual set.

1. Image job

Decide what this picture must accomplish.

What are you making?

Profile picture, banner, cover, character reference, scene art, object, or transparent overlay.

Where will it be displayed?

Include platform and exact aspect ratio.

What must survive the crop?

Name the protected subject, text-safe area, or centered focal point.

2. Identity lock

Write the features that cannot drift.

Subject identity

Age range, face shape, eyes, nose, mouth, skin, hair, body proportions, and distinctive marks.

Clothing and objects

List signature pieces and what must be visible.

What should never change between images?

Keep this short enough to paste into every prompt.

3. Composition

Tell the camera what it is doing.

Framing and angle

Close-up, bust, full body, exact profile, three-quarter view, overhead, or wide establishing shot.

Pose and expression

Use physical actions and visible emotion.

Foreground, subject, and background

Place each major element deliberately.

4. Light, palette, and style

Atmosphere works better after structure.

Lighting

Source, direction, hardness, color, and time of day.

Color palette

Choose dominant, supporting, and accent colors.

Art direction

Medium, finish, era, genre, texture, and level of realism.

5. Consistency and exclusions

Protect the result from common generation crimes.

What must the model preserve?

Identity, number of subjects, anatomy, costume, jewelry, tattoo placement, camera distance.

What must not appear?

Wrong age, extra limbs, text, labels, watermarks, photorealism, or unwanted background details.

Reference-image notes

Say what to copy and what to change from each reference.
